The Mayor of Mercer

Chris Portman always had jobs in high school: newspaper rounds, washing cars, and giving private lessons. But last year, the Pennsylvania teenager decided to try something a bit different. He competed with his hometown friends for the position of mayor and won.

Nineteen-year-old Chris is in his first year at college and has to work as hard as any other student, but when the homework is finished he also has the challenges of being a mayor. This includes council meetings, money-raising activities, and personal appearances in public. Chris, who is one of the youngest mayors in the country, enjoys being in the spotlight. Chris' father also has two important jobs in Mercer. He is the clerk and the treasurer. When Chris announced his plans to run for mayor, his friends thought he was joking. He began studying politics, taking speech classes and getting to know local leaders. Inhabitants of his hometown, Mercer, a quiet community with a population of about 2,000, began to show support.

Chris gets $1,850 for being mayor and his responsibilities include organizing the local police force and making decisions on how to improve the town. He also wants to re-start the Mercer Foundation to raise money to help the community.

After finishing school Chris wants to be a political analyst. After that he would love to become president of the United States. He believes America's communities need to come together and new ideas from younger generations can help build a new team spirit of cooperation.
